Pay close attention to spelling! Follow the lesson presentation and answer the questions given. Your task this lesson is to write a police report explaining the strange occurrences of Tuesday night. Activity 1: Carefully read through the example report. Identify the key information delivered in each paragraph. Is the report written in 1st or 3rd person? Past tense or present tense? Imaginative or factual style? Activity 2: Your task is to begin the first two sections of your report. 1st section: This should include details of evidence found at the scene, and answer the questions who, what, where and when. 2nd section: Contains witness statements from interviews, written in reported speech. Use the information from your interviews conducted last week. Challenge: Begin to plan your final section, in which the investigator explains what they think happened, based on the evidence.	Spag starter- follow link to complete the Pobble activity on formal writing. Follow the lesson presentation and answer the questions given. Activity 1: Read through the example report one more time. - How formal is the writing? - Who is the report written for? - Have they used speech marks? Why? - Finally, examine how the writer has used description of the facts- the writing is factual. Activity 2: To complete the final section of your report, in which you explain your conclusions. (What you think happened). You should ensure that all of your statements are backed up by the facts and evidence. Challenge: Go back and edit your report from the beginning, paying close attention to the level of formality. Also check punctuation and word choices, you could use a thesaurus to find more ambitious vocabulary.
