What features do you think it has, based on what you have read? Over the next two weeks we will be writing a collection of non-chronological reports, and collecting these to be published in a class gazette. You can choose to write about Women in WW2, or Inventions of WW2. Activity 1: You will need to research your chosen field. First, use the links provided to read all about your chosen subject. Do not write anything down yet! Activity 2: Once you have read through several articles, you can begin to make some notes. Remember, you do not need to write down everything- only the most important information, such as names, dates, places and a brief summary of ideas. Plenary: Read through your notes carefully. How could you make it easier and more engaging for somebody with no knowledge of WW2? Suggest two ways you could do this. Continue to read Goodnight Mr Tom for 15 mins each day.	This lesson you will be learning to organise information around a theme. Follow the lesson presentation and answer the questions given. Read through the example Non-chronological reports. Make a list of features these reports have in common. What do you think these examples have done well? Which features or ideas would you like to include in your own work? Activity 1: Read through the mixed-up notes paragraph and decide on 2 different subjects you could separate these into. Highlight in different colours to show which sentences belong with which subject. Activity 2: You can now re-order and expand upon these sentences to make your own paragraph. You could add information about the subject or the verb of each to give more detail to your reader. Plenary: Read your paragraphs to a family member, who will listen and give feedback about how engaging and easy to understand your writing was. You can edit and improve your work based on your feedback.	In this lesson you will practise using the relative clause. Follow the lesson presentation and explore BBC resources to find out more about relative clauses. Follow the steps on the 'creating relative clauses' slide to practise creating these in a sentence! Don't forget a relative pronoun. Task 1: Complete Year 4 Activity sheet 1 from the home learning page. Task 2: Read and expand the independent clauses given. Ensure you are using a relative pronoun! Plenary: Watch and sing the Relative Clauses song.	Pobble Task - The Creators  Complete the following tasks: • Question Time • Punctuation/Grammar challenge. • Sentence challenge.
